The School was established under Dr. John Gilbert as a Division of the Department of Paediatrics in the UBC Faculty of Medicine in 1969. In 1982, UBC assumed responsibility for a portion of the School's budget and salaries. In 1981, the School achieved independent status as a School. In 1982, UBC assumed responsibility for a portion of the School's budget and salaries. In 1988, the School relocated to the Friedman Building. In 2008, the School relocated to the Friedman Building. In 2015, the School moved into the new James Mather Building. In 2019, the School moved into the new James Mather Building. The School has won a Funds for Excellence Award from the Province of British Columbia, allowing the School to double enrolment and add new faculty. The School has also won a Funds for Excellence Award from the Province of British Columbia, allowing the School to double enrolment and add new faculty. The School has also won a Funds for Excellence Award from the Province of British Columbia, allowing the School to double enrolment and add new faculty. The School has also won a Funds for Excellence Award from the Province of British Columbia, allowing the School to double enrolment and add new faculty. The School has also won a Funds for Excellence Award from the Province of British Columbia, allowing the School to double enrolment and add new faculty. The School has also won a Funds for Excellence Award from the Province of British Columbia, allowing the School to double enrolment and add new faculty. The School has also won a Funds for Excellence Award from the Province of British Columbia, allowing the School to double enrolment and add new faculty.